

Deer Season's Over. Now what?

When deer season is over, it's important to start thinking right away about next season. After all, don't you want the coming year to be your best ever?

A recent Realtree blog post offers three tips for off-season activities that can play a key role in your preparations for the coming season. Here are the tips:

1. Scout for deer just after the season ends, taking advantage of the opportunity to track all the activity from previous weeks and months.
2. Put up your trail cameras to capture the movement patterns of the deer you want to hunt.
3. And take advantage of the opportunity to do some antler hunting.

Another great thing to do after deer season? Find a recreational property to buy near your favorite hunting areas, to give you a home base for the next deer season.
